THE VALUE

What a finished private suite replaces

CROWN OAK CENTRE

A firm of four to ten people is often aquiring its workplace piecemeal: desks by the month, a conference room by the hour, a kitchen it shares with strangers, and an address that belongs to someone else.

A finished suite at Crown Oak Centre gathers all of it under one lease. Private offices, a reception area, a meeting room and a kitchenette come with the space, so the cost is tied to the square footage rather than to every hire. Because the suites are already built out, there is no construction budget and no construction calendar between signing and occupancy.

Against the office towers of Lake Mary and Maitland, the campus format leaves out what a small firm rarely uses and always pays for: the lobby, the garage, the amenity floor. What remains is the part that matters to clients and staff: a brick colonial address, parking at the door and a name at the entry.

Monthly rent for the available suites runs from $2,050 to $3,469, and the written proposal sets out the lease structure and any operating expenses and services, so the all-in occupancy cost is on the table before any commitment.
